If a basketball player says they make 75% of the shots they take, but they only make 65% of shots in a sample, does that mean they're lying? Significance tests give us a formal process for using sample data to evaluate how plausible a claim about a population value is. We calculate P-values to see how likely sample results are to occur by random chance, and we use P-values to make conclusions ...

A random variable is some outcome from a chance process, like how many heads will occur in a series of 20 flips (a discrete random variable), or how many seconds it took someone to read this sentence (a continuous random variable). We calculate probabilities of random variables, calculate expected value, and look what happens when we transform and combine random variables.
