‘ Possession ’ can be described as the intentional exclusive physical control of a thing. A person who takes physical control of land or goods, with the intention of excluding all others from it or them, acquires possession of it or them as a matter of law. This is the case even if the taking of control was unlawful.

Land requires a longer period for acquisition by possession for a certain time. Land cannot be stolen. There are special restrictions on the power of alienation of land by those in a fiduciary position, such as tutors and curators. There were in classical law, diminished under Justinian, material differences in the possessory remedies affecting it.

To begin , like the start of any law assignment , we will start with defining land. Defining land is not as straight forward as one might hope, for there is no single authoritative , statutory definition . However a good starting point is the partial definition of “ land ” in the Law of Property Act 1925 (LPA 1925) S.205 (1) (ix) ;

Introduction. The core aim of the Land Registration Act (LRA) 2002 is “ to ensure that ownership of land in England and Wales takes the form of ‘ title by registration ’ , rather than ‘ registration of title ’ . ” . [1]
This marks a radical departure from centuries of land law, which established possession as the basis of title. [2]

Land Registration Act 2002 - Law Teacher
In common law systems, land tenure is the legal regime in which land is owned by an individual, who is said to "hold" the land. It determines who can use land, for how long and under what conditions. Tenure may be based both on official laws and policies, and on informal customs. In other words, land tenure system implies a system according to ...

For example, if A signs a contract to purchase land from B, but B refuses to complete the contract, equity will grant the remedy of specific performance against B, and B will have to transfer the land to A. This happened so routinely that eventually A was treated in equity as if he held a property interest in the land once the contract was signed.
