Matachines. The exotic name of the dance alone invokes an aura of ancient mystery and intrigue. Then again, the masked, caped, and ribbon bedecked dancers that swirl and bow to the rhythm of the rattles accompanying the haunting repetitive violin music appear to be just as mysterious as the name. A young girl dressed in a white dress is led around by two strangely masked whip-carrying characters and threatened by a dancer dressed as a bull.

The matachines, crouching in respect to the Virgin, approach the shrine prior to the dance. The hymn ended and the bamboo flutes shrilled as the dancers rhythmically swayed and turned, the sticks striking the floor in a rapid, staccato unison. At one moment the performers danced in place, at other times they crossed and spun.
