Glad to see another Schecter owner on here. They're (in my opinion) very underrated guitar makers. My first real guitar was a Schecter C-1+ I got it used for 220 but new wasn't much more than that and it plays more than acceptable for an intermediate and maybe professional player with some new pickups.

Which isn't bad, just that this is probably best when stabled with other more versatile guitars, say a strat and a les paul. Also quite heavy.
Beautifully crafted for the price point but not one you want to spend 4 hours on stage with. Kinda rare, I was told that Schecter sells less than a dozen of these a year.

the Retro Series is an electric guitar for those bored of the oversaturation of Fender and Gibson guitars in the world. Instead the TSH-1 offers a hybrid design that incorporates all of the best features of both those big names and mixes them up with some Schecter pizzazz. Regardless of how it looks though, it's the playability that gives the TSH-1 the jump on it's rivals: many true vintage and vintag inspired instruments are actually quite hard to play ...

Schecter TSH Electric Guitars | Rich
Tone Music

The TSH-1 has a fat neck that gives it a fifties Les Paul vibe. Playability is great with the action on our example being sweet and low, but without suffering from any buzzing. Bending strings anywhere on the bound 'board is a pleasure thanks to the Gibson-like 628mm (24.75-inch) scale, 22 medium frets and the typically Schecter 356mm (14-inch) radius.
